as we see it

■ Here we are two weeks before the season opens, and a responsible testing service, with a four-year record of gauging the appeal of program ideas with 70-80 percent accuracy, already has tested the themes of the new shows on some 2000 potential viewers—a cross section of the audience according to sex and age. The results show that four age groups were most enthusiastic about the programs: boys 6-11, boys 12-17, girls 6-11 and girls 12-17. Least enthusiastic were women over 18 and men over 50.

■ The TvQ organization, which numbers among its clients two networks as well as leading producers, agencies and advertisers, conducted the survey. Respondents were given 50-to-100-word descriptions of each new program along with its title, length and stars. Each person was then asked to name the new shows he thought would be "one of my favorites." If 20 percent of those surveyed thought a program would be one of their favorites, it was given a PIQ (Program Idea Quotient) of 20. The PIQs ranged from 1 to 43.

■ Among boys 6-11 years old, 14 of the new-show ideas clicked with at least 20 percent—so these shows had PIQs of 20 or over, which is a high figure in this poll. Among boys 12-17, some 10 shows had PIQs over 20; among girls 6-11 and 12-17, eight shows had PIQs of 20 or over.

Women 18-34 gave two shows PIQs over 20, women 35-49 one show and women over 50 one show. Men 18-34 gave five shows PIQs of 20 or over, men 35-49 four shows, men over 50 one show.

■ Besides the basic idea of a show, its execution, the time slot, competition and other factors contribute to its success or failure. So the kiddies aren't entirely in charge.

Yet.

TV TELETYPE*: NEW YORK: NEIL HICKEY REPORTS:

The full plans for the beautification of Washington will be revealed on ABC's Thanksgiving special, MRS. LYNDON B. JOHNSON's tour of the capital . . . ED WYNN and his grandchildren will do the hosting chores on NBC's November special about the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus.

Last season's That Was the Week That Was is having repercussions on Broadway. It brought together producer LELAND HAYWARD, lyricist RHODA ROBERTS and composer KENNETH JACOBSON, who are now collaborating on the forthcoming "Hot September," a musical version of "Picnic" . . . On Nov. 1 PERLE MESTA, Washington's perennial "Hostess with the Mostes'," will hold a real live "wedding reception" in the capital for INGER STEVENS. That's the air date of INGER's TV marriage to her congressman co-star WILLIAM WINDOM on The Farmer's Daughter.

Ten starlets chosen by Hollywood makeup artists and hairdressers will appear in the 13th Annual Deb Star Ball on ABC Jan. 7 . . . CBS's Look Up and Live has a two-parter on Sept. 12 and 19 on "The Life of Dante," and on Sept. 26 will be doing an original drama celebrating the Jewish high holy days.

PETER JENNINGS' evening news show is now seen on 119 stations, the largest number ever to carry an ABC News program . . . SIR JOHN GIELGUD's program of dramatic readings from SHAKESPEARE, "Ages of Man," will be aired by CBS in two parts--Sunday Jan. 23, and Sunday Jan. 30--both, 4:30-5:30 P.M. (ET).

ABC Scope on Sept. 18 is going to ask the rather pertinent question: "Where Goes the GOP?" . . . CBS has a special forthcoming, which has been in the works over a year, on the British sculptor HENRY MOORE. CHARLES COLLINGWOOD narrates.

NBC Sports in Action has some pretty far-out events in prospect: First, there is the National Parachuting Championship from Orange, Mass., on Nov. 6; then the World's Lumberjack Championship from Hayward, Wis., on Dec. 11; then a Portuguese bullfight on Dec. 18; and finally the National Model Airplane Championships from Willow Grove, Pa., on Dec. 25.

LLOYD BRIDGES SHE ISN'T

Unlike the old Sea Hunter, Lucy has some misgivings about denizens of the deep

The idea of this sequence, which will be in the first new Lucy Show of the season—Sept. 13 on CBS—was to have Lucy lose her son's rubber ball in the water. Then Lucy would go in after it and be bedeviled by four denizens of the deep—three bottle-nose dolphins and a sea lion named Cy.

denizens bedeviled like mad, it was more in fun than in anger. It was almost as though the animals knew their guest was the happy-go-lucky queen of television comedy, Lucille Ball. "Sometimes when a TV company is filming here," said a representative of Marineland of the Pacific (Palos Verdes, Cal.), "the animals couldn't care less. They sulk, goof off, and the results are miserable. But I've never seen them respond as well as today. They leaped around like puppies."

That they did, as you can see. Previous pages, top left: Lucy bawls as a dolphin flips the ball out of the water to a sea lion. Below: Lucy placates dolphin. Then, Lucy fears the dolphin is coming right out of the water after her.

Below, on these pages: sea lion gets into raft before Lucy can, resists effort to oust him, finally Lucy has the raft to herself. Right: Lucy in a "wet suit," then in a wet "wet suit."

The dolphins in the tank with Lucy weighed between 250 and 350 pounds, and Cy the sea lion weighed in at about 185. Said Lucy, "Frankly, I was scared." The critters in the tank actually nudged her to the edge of the pool, trying to get her to play, before being hand-signaled away by attendants.

The attendants assured Lucy the dolphins had never hurt anyone, but Cy had twice nipped trainers. "After all," said one, "these are wild animals—even if super-trained."

That's some consolation.

FOOTBALL IS BEST OF ALL

By Melvin Durslag

Arthur Modell, the proprietor of the Cleveland Browns, sat back in a moment of quiet reflection and observed that it is, indeed, a shame that other sports can't do for television what professional football can.

In so many words, he intimated that the marriage of TV and pro football was made in heaven, and, while he wouldn't be so crass as to suggest that everything else drop dead, he did point out that what competitors had to offer was comparatively thin.

"Let's start with baseball," said Arthur, whose Browns emerged last year as rulers of the National Football League. "I won't say baseball is a bad game. It just happens to be too slow for TV. A home run is about as exciting as our booting an extra point. And secondly, baseball players are stationed in such a way that you can't see the whole team on your screen."

Modell describes basketball as a good physical sport, but too repetitious to make exciting viewing on TV. "There's a sameness to this game," he says. "Not enough different things happen. A guy puts the ball into the air and it goes through the hoop—or it doesn't."

Hockey would be all right on television, he concedes, were it not for one failing. "You can't see the puck."

As for boxing, Modell confesses that it is "perfect" for viewing. "The only trouble is, boxing has no more performers. If Joe Louis were active, he would break all records in TV ratings. But the sport today is dead."

Modell, in truth, has finished a symphony begun several years ago by his colleague, George Preston Marshall, of the Washington Redskins. Surveying the sports TV scene coolly, George observed of golf, for instance:

"I have studied the game for years and found only this—a guy hits the ball and walks after it."

Horse racing—"A financial transaction that has no place in the sports picture."

Bowling—"You roll a ball down the alley and one of two things happens. It knocks down the pins, or it doesn't. The noise is deafening, the atmosphere smoky and the participants are attired in jerseys that bear such inspirational messages on the back as 'Sam's Auto Painting.'"

There will no doubt be many dissents, but dissenting votes will be nothing foreign to the Cleveland owner, who came into the National League with a flourish in 1961.

For $3.9 million—then a staggering figure for a football franchise—he bought the Browns with the proviso that Paul Brown, one of the club's founders and perhaps America's most famous coach, come with the package.

Signed to an eight-year contract, Brown lasted only two. The young owner fired him peremptorily in an action that flabbergasted the football world. The contract, of course, is still valid, and Brown today receives $82,000 a year from Cleveland as an "advisor" whose advice is never solicited.

Modell also introduced the double-header to football. For this preseason production in Cleveland Municipal Stadium, the draw has run upward of 80,000 each year, which is pretty consistent with the Browns' regular-season average. They have been pro football's gate leader for the last two years.

For the 41-year-old Cleveland owner, the going hasn't always been downhill. A native of Brooklyn, where he grew up in a home distressingly short of funds, he took advantage of his hitch in the Army Air Forces during World War II to attend a television production school under the GI Bill. In 1947, with a telephone booth in Grand Central Station serving literally as his office, he formed "Arthur B. Modell Television Productions, Inc."

His capital at the time was $4, but his ideas were big. To the president of a food-market chain, he proposed a plan whereby he would install TV sets in 200 stores whose shoppers could look at a daytime variety show which Arthur would produce. All the chain had to do was sponsor the show, in exchange for which Modell promised startling gains in sales.

After 13 weeks, the TV sets were thrown out of the markets by the company, which found that television was a nuisance. Shoppers watching the screen were bumping into each other's carts, and jam-ups were resulting from traffic that wasn't moving.

Modell, however, managed to keep his show on the air. Within five years the advertising revenue from the program was running $25,000 a week—and Arthur's end was 48½ percent. Soon, he was filming shows for syndication, and, in 1961, he bought the Browns with about everything he had accumulated, plus borrowed cash.

A bachelor encamped in his Cleveland apartment, he performed what amounted to a death watch every football weekend during the early days of the ownership. Beginning on Saturday morning, he would phone the meteorology station on the hour for weather forecasts, sweating out rain and snow that could ruin his Sunday gate. One time he got so excited when an earlier forecast of snow changed to clear that he ran down the street and yelled to passers-by that it was perfectly safe to attend the game Sunday.

Today, he no longer runs frightened. Like others in the National League, he shares in the $14.1 million a year package with CBS, which will be bringing 96 regular-season games and nine exhibitions to the air this fall. A franchise that cost Modell less than $4 million four years ago couldn't be purchased today for $10 million.

Yet, for all the riches that have come from television, the Cleveland owner continues to regard TV with an arched eyebrow.

"We sold 32,488 season tickets last year and hope to increase this figure to 45,000 this year," he says. "We are striving harder than ever for gate sales as a hedge against TV disaster. Television is a volatile business. We have no assurance that if it finds something better, it won't dump us."

"Secondly, there is certain cause for concern when the contract with CBS terminates at the end of this year. The last time, three networks were bidding for NFL games. Now that NBC is allied with the American League, the bidding will be reduced to two."

To be on the safe side, Modell this year has raised the price of every seat in Cleveland $1. Such gestures, of course, help make pro football even more ideal to those watching at home for nothing.

Martin Peyton built a town. He had a daughter Catherine (who died of a bleeding ulcer). Catherine had married Leslie Harrington (who married Catherine for her money). They had two sons, Rodney and Norman. Rodney married Betty Anderson—daughter of George Anderson (a drinker, who tried to shoot Leslie Harrington but missed and hit Elliot Carson who was on parole for murdering his wife Elizabeth but Elliot really didn't do it, Catherine Harrington did) and Julie Anderson (who worked for Leslie Harrington and had an affair with him)—because she told him she was pregnant but she really wasn't (actually she had been but lost her baby in a car accident).

Rodney was really in love with Allison Mackenzie (illegitimate daughter of Constance Mackenzie and Elliot Carson, who had an affair before he was sent to prison for the murder of his wife whom Catherine Harrington allegedly killed because Elizabeth Carson was having an affair with Catherine's husband Leslie). Norman Harrington, too, was in love with Allison until Rodney and Betty got an annulment (after Betty ran away to live in New York) and Rodney took up with Allison again.

daughter of Ada Jacks (a tavern-keeper) and an ex-girl friend of ruffian Joe Chernak who thinks he can win Rita back by forcing his attentions upon her even though Rita has made it quite clear that her heart belongs only to Norman. Norman is a troublemaker because he doesn't believe his mother killed Elizabeth Carson like everybody says she did.

Leslie Harrington had to move away from Peyton Place after all the scandal with his family (he went to Europe with his sister Laura, who drinks); however, Rodney and Norman stayed and took an apartment in town over the drugstore that used to be owned by Elizabeth Carson's father, Mr. Hanley, and her brother Paul Hanley (whose testimony at Elliot Carson's trial convicted Elliot). Paul Hanley feels guilty about this since Elliot was innocent.

Living in the old Harrington House now are David and Doris Schuster and their deaf daughter, Kim. David and Doris met while working in the same office in New York. David was married but Doris took him away from his child bride, Margaret. David now has Leslie's old job as manager of the Peyton Mill. Their daughter Kim, though deaf, can talk but she won't talk to her parents because she hates them.

She will talk to Allison Mackenzie because Allison wants to be her friend. As a matter of fact, David Schuster wants to be Allison's friend (she looks like Margaret).

Allison's mother, Constance, has a friend in Dr. Michael Rossi, who works at the hospital with Betty Anderson. Dr. Rossi once worked at the hospital where Allison was born and he knew the circumstances of her birth.

Dr. Rossi is also very devoted to Dr. Claire Morton (daughter of Dr. Robert Morton, who misdiagnosed Catherine Harrington's case and actually caused her death and tried to foist the blame on Dr. Rossi. But they're good buddies now). Dr. Claire feels she is a failure because she ran out on her husband (the great Dr. Vincent Markham) and left him in Peru, where they had been working to cure the natives of disease. Vincent, concerned, hotfooted it up to Peyton Place to surprise his wife. His bus ran off the highway and Vincent arrived at the hospital as a patient. Claire was surprised (she was in the arms of Michael Rossi at the time). She also had a surprise of her own—she wants a divorce.

Dr. Claire also shares her troubles with the young Rev. Mr. Jerry Bedford (who has eyes for Betty Anderson). The reverend performed the marriage ceremony of Elliot Carson to Constance Mackenzie after Elliot recovered from his bullet wound.

Allison, not too happy about the marriage, is very fortunate in having kindly Uncle Matt (Matthew Swain, editor of the Peyton Place newspaper) to confide in. He gives her advice. He also gives the whole town advice. Matthew is fond of Ted Dowell (lawyer for the Peyton Mill). Ted has taken Steven Cord into his law office to help him with Martin Peyton's private affairs. (Steven too has eyes for Betty Anderson.) Like Norman, Steven doesn't believe Catherine Harrington killed Elizabeth Carson. He is the son of Hannah Cord (the Harrington's ex-housekeeper who is now nursemaid and companion to Martin Peyton). Steven is bitter towards Rodney and Norman because they had many advantages in growing up that he didn't. But Steven went to Harvard Law School and has returned to Peyton Place to practice. Perhaps he will prove that the whole town conspired to murder Elizabeth Carson because she was writing a TV series exposing Peyton Place.

Everything clear?

FOR THE RECORD

Northern California Edition

The Riot: At times during the appalling riot in south Los Angeles in mid-August, virtually the only news link with the embattled area was a TV station's helicopter. The 46-square-mile "no man's land" was no land for men on foot or in cars and trucks. TV mobile units were overturned and burned, and cameramen, soundmen and reporters (three of whom had recently returned safely from Vietnam) were stoned and beaten and pursued through the streets by angry mobs. One Los Angeles station's car was pinned down by sniper fire. Three others were badly damaged, one by an ax. All of Los Angeles' network stations eventually switched to unmarked cars.

The helicopter cruised over the riot-torn area throughout the five days. It was used by independent station KTLA to provide graphic coverage (with a high-power zoom lens) and commentary not only for itself but, at various times, for all three networks. Even police and National Guard officers in the emergency headquarters at 1st and San Pedro followed the 'copter coverage on TV screens. In many cases it provided the first information about new outbreaks, and it tracked down and disproved false reports of police officers trapped within the riot zone. Announcer-pilot Larry Scheer and engineer-cameraman Harold Morby were the targets of sniper fire, but they persisted in the coverage at altitudes as low as 500 feet.

State and city leaders took to television during the long, hot days and nights of rioting and looting, to plead for order. L.A.'s police chief, William Parker, appearing Saturday night on a KNXT program, Newsmakers, was asked whether he thought the TV show was reaching the looters. "Well," he said, "They've got more television sets than they had before."

Lucy and the Heckler: The annual stockholders meeting of Desilu Productions, Inc., was a show in itself this year. The meeting at Desilu Studio in Los Angeles Aug. 17 was enlivened by a verbal sparring session between company president Lucille Ball and John Gilbert of New York. Gilbert and his brother Lewis are veteran hecklers of management at stockholders meetings. Discarding the spirit of I Love Lucy, Gilbert demanded to know why Miss Ball was being paid approximately $500,000 this year as Madame President and the company's star performer. Lucy was worth 200 percent more money, he was told. During the long meeting Gilbert's persistence almost got him thrown out of the room by a studio policeman, but Miss Ball saved his neck. Carrying on his attack, Gilbert forced two issues to a written vote and lost both, 850,000 shares to 60. During a recess from the battle, President Ball looked at Gilbert and asked, "Do you mind if I go to the ladies' room?" He graciously nodded his permission. As the meeting ended, Gilbert said: "This has been a real show. Too bad it wasn't on television. It might have increased our revenues."—Henry Harding

SO THERE

About Cleveland Amory's Aug. 14 review of The Perry Mason Show, I've only one thing to say—Mr. Amory wouldn't know a good show if it walked up and bit him. Maybe Mr. Amory can't figure out the plots of The Perry Mason Show, but the rest of us aren't as simple-minded as he is.

HISTORICAL NOTE

I am now 80 years old, and I often wonder if my face and voice may not have been the first ever seen or heard over a television hookup. On Feb. 2, 1920, I resigned as minister of a Unitarian church in Brooklyn to become an assistant New York Telephone Co. commercial engineer at 15 Dey St., New York City. On my first day of employment, Mr. H. R. Gabay, general commercial engineer, sent me to the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. building at 195 Broadway to assist in a new-fangled experiment. Telephone engineers had hooked up a line between the 15 Dey St. and the 24 Walker St. telephone buildings to see if a picture and a talking voice could be successfully transmitted simultaneously over the same wire connection. They specified that they wanted someone who wouldn't panic if asked to talk in the presence of flood lights, recording instruments and a dozen hovering engineers. Mr. Gabay—because of my ministerial experience, I presume—thought I should qualify. My face and voice were visible and audible to me and people at both ends of the hookup. The experiment was pronounced a success, though I was a bit horrified at the pimply-saffron reproduction of myself on a glass-faced box beside me. Nonetheless, this experiment may have been the infant cry of a tremendous new industry—television.

[This experiment apparently was separate from those of C. F. Jenkins and V. K. Zworykin, which were being run at approximately the same time. Mr. Kyle could not recall who conducted the A.T.&T. experiments—Ed.]

TOO MUCH, TOO SOON

In your "As We See It" column of Aug. 14 you say the commercials come 10 to 12 minutes apart in late-night movies. You're lucky. I time the ones I watch at two minutes of commercials every six minutes.

GEMINI COVERAGE

As we went to press, the Gemini V space launch, originally scheduled for Thursday, Aug. 19, had been tentatively re-scheduled for Saturday, Aug. 21. If last Saturday's lift-off went according to schedule, the networks will offer coverage throughout the day. ABC plans a half-hour report at approximately 11 A.M. and a series of one-minute reports on the hour; CBS will make use of visual streamers during regular programs, with a five-minute report at approximately 3:30 P.M., and NBC will provide a minimum of 10 one-minute reports.

12:30 5 8 10 12 PRO FOOTBALL

SPECIAL The Los Angeles Rams meet the Chicago Bears in an exhibition game at Dudley Field, Nashville, Tenn. Gil Stratton, Don Paul and George Connor report. (Live)

Rams Scouting Report

The Rams were fifth in the West last season with a 5-7-2 record, but they should move up this year: Coach Harland Svare has two good quarterbacks in Bill Munson and Roman Gabriel, and the depth in receivers should strengthen the passing attack. The Rams also have strength in the offensive and defensive lines and some impressive rookies.

Bears Scouting Report

The 1963 NFL champions fell to sixth in the West last year and, although coach George Halas says he expects a "quick recovery," it will take a lot of work. Rookie Dick Butkus and the still-intact defensive backfield are the bright spots. The Bears have goon receivers in Mike Ditka and Johnny Morris, but lack depth. Rookie back Gale Sayers could add much-needed punch to the ground attack.

Strong are under a spell. Long John: Robert Newton. Jim: Kit Taylor.

Browns Scouting Report

The 1964 NFL champions do not have a sensational rookie crop, but, says coach Blanton Collier, "teams that win championships shouldn't have to change too much." He's right. The Browns have a powerful and well-balanced offense and an adequate defense. They lack depth in the offensive backfield, but big Jim Brown is not injury-prone.

Lions Scouting Report

New head coach Harry Gilmer is looking for a starting quarterback, and most of the fighting for the job should be between veterans Milt Plum and Earl Morrall. Other contenders are Sonny Gibbs and rookie Tom Myers. Gilmer must also beef up the running game, which has been good, but should be better. The Lions have fine receivers in Terry Barr, Gail Cogdill and Jim Gibbons. On defense, the Lions have to cope with age and injuries.

Afternoon

Huntley and Fred Freed moderate a panel discussion among Ambassador-at-Large W. Averell Harriman; Sen. J. William Fulbright (R., Ark.); Dean Francis Wilcox of the School of Advanced International Studies, Johns Hopkins University; and Samuel P. Hayes, president of the Foreign Policy Association. 1:30 7 7 11 13 AMERICAN GOLF CLASSIC

SPECIAL Final-round action in the fifth annual American Golf Classic is telecast live from the Firestone Country Club (site of the 1967 PGA Championship) in Akron, Ohio. Jim McKay, Chris Schenkel, Bill Flemming, Byron Nelson and last year's winner Ken Venturi report.

The $100,000 event has a $20,000 first prize (second money: $12,000; third, $6800). Pros expected to compete include previous winners Arnold Palmer, Johnny Pott and Jay Hebert, and Masters champ Jack Nicklaus, British Open winner Peter Thomson, PGA champ Dave Marr, Tony Lema, Julius Boros, Doug Ford, Bruce Crampton, Bob Charles, Bruce Devlin, Doug Sanders and Bobby Nichols.

The course is a par-70, 7165 yards. The 16th hole, ruefully called "The Monster," is a double-dogleg to the left, long and well-trapped. The 17th has a dangerous ring of traps at the dogleg right and a pot trap to guard the hogbacked green. It's also uphill all the way. The 18th, a long par-4, has an undulating green that's the largest on the course.

It makes good sense to arrange for a Homeowner loan to pay all your bills and installment loans. Then, instead of making many big payments each month, you'll have just one lower monthly payment—chances are it will be less than half of what you are now paying, because home loan payments are lower than those available through most any other loan.

NATIONAL DRIVERS TEST

SPECIAL Are you fit to drive a car? This test, first telecast last May, is rerun just before the Labor Day weekend (which last year saw 531 fatalities, a record for this holiday). It puts drivers behind the wheel to evaluate their driving skills.

According to CBS, nearly 30 million viewers saw this show, which was acclaimed by critics and public officials. The response to this new TV format has prompted CBS and NBC to plan public tests on other subjects for the new season.

The driving test has four sections:

Judgment. Films of three common collision situations are stopped before impact and host Walter Cronkite asks four questions on defensive-driving techniques. The crash is then seen in slow-motion and the correct answer given.

Knowledge. Animated films illustrate a quiz on rules of the road.

Perception. A short film on driving hazards tests alertness.

Special Situations. A test on how to handle an unavoidable collision.

After each segment, Mike Wallace reports the returns of 2000 drivers, whose answers were tabulated by computer.

Written and produced by Warren V. Bush. (R; 60 min.)

8:30 3 4 DR. KILDARE—Drama

'TYGER, TYGER. . .'

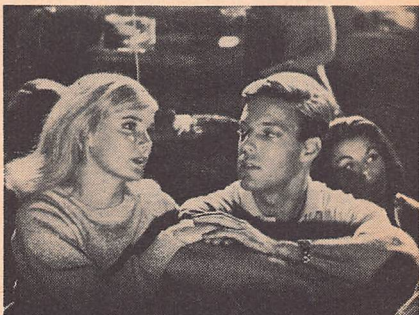

This two-part story of Dr. Kildare's romance with surfer Pat Holmes established several high points when it was first presented in January 1964. The award-winning drama attained the highest ratings in the series' four-year history and marked guest star Yvette Mimieux's only major appearance to date in a television drama.

In this first part, Pat is brought to Blair Hospital after she faints while surfing. Tests indicate that she has petit mal, a mild form of epilepsy that causes only minor inconvenience—but can develop into major seizures.

Written by Ben Masselink. Directed by John Newland, who portrays Paul Montgomery. Kildare: Richard Chamberlain. Gillespie: Raymond Massey. (R; 60 min.)

Answer to last week's puzzle

After 45 years, he's still
'Bee-yammy' to Benny

SENTIMENTAL FAREWELL

The weekly 'Jack Benny Show' has ended, but the memories linger on.

By Benny Rubin

I had just finished doing The Jack Benny Show, and there was a lump in my throat as big as a tennis ball. Not that I'm an especially sentimental man—after all, I've done I'd guess 500 shows with Jack—but this was different. This was the last show, the end of an era, the climax of 33 incredible years on top of the radio and television heap. When this one was locked up, there would be no more regularly scheduled weekly Jack Benny show. For me this was like saying the sun would not rise tomorrow.

As I looked around the huge Universal City soundstage, I wondered what Don Wilson, the Smothers Brothers (who were guests that week), director Norman Abbott, producer Irving Fein and some of the others were thinking. Every one of the 50-odd members of the cast and crew knew it was Jack's swan song as a regular performer. Yet, like a pitcher working on a no-hitter, no one mentioned it.

When it was time to go home, there was a sudden stillness. I sensed that if anybody made a sad speech I couldn't stand it. So I ran backstage, where the makeup man was waiting to remove the beard I was using to play the Viennese psychiatrist. My only thought was to get out the door as fast as I could without running into anyone, especially Jack.

Naturally I ran into him. Only then did I notice waiters wheeling in a long table loaded with goodies. A voice said, "Aren't you going to stay for my party, Bee-yammy?"—that's what he's called me for 45 years.

Now I'm known as a guy you can just say hello to and he'll tell you 10 jokes. I can talk more in 10 minutes than Milton Berle can in an hour. But not then. Instead I was thinking, Jack, what are we going to celebrate? That you got yourself into a bind with Jim Aubrey [the now-departed head of CBS Television] over a time slot, that when you had the temerity to switch networks your old bosses clobbered you by flooding the market with your reruns, that because of this, audiences are to be deprived of one of continued our great talents?

I thought it but I didn't say it. I turned and faced him. We didn't speak for a few seconds. Finally he said softly, with a smile on that pixy kisser of his, "Some party." I squeezed his arm and ran out of there.

I got in my car and put the key in the ignition. It was then that the memories came flooding over me. They took me back 45 years to Keith's Theater in Syracuse [N.Y.], where there was a young guy—he was then 27—named Ben K. Benny on the bill. That's when we first met. He was a stand-up single with a fiddle under his arm and a bow dangling from his fingers. I was a fast-talking, loud kind of comedian, and I just couldn't believe that soft, slow delivery. He'd come out and say to the orchestra leader: "How's the show up till now?" The leader would say, "Fine," and he would say, "Well, I'll put a stop to that." Then he'd go on with the jokes, waving the fiddle.

The night he became Jack

I was there the night the wire came from Pat Casey, head of the Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, telling him he couldn't use the Ben Benny tag because it sounded too much like Ben Bernie, the orchestra leader. Benny was beside himself. In those days sailors called everybody "Jack." A couple of them breezed into the restaurant where we were sitting. "Hey, Jack!" one of them said. "Didn't I catch your act at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station?" That's how he got to be "Jack" Benny.

The next time I saw him was in 1923 in Kansas City. He'd given up carrying the fiddle, borrowing one from the pit man for the finish of his act. Instead he had a straw hat under his arm and a cigar dangling from one hand—that was because he had got so used to the fiddle and bow, he had to have something. Later, he gave up the cigar and hat. That's how the famous Benny folded arms originated; he had to have something to do with his hands.

We became great friends although exact opposites. I loved the horses. He didn't. I loved the girls. He didn't. I used bad language. He didn't. After Jack played the Orpheum in Los Angeles in 1927, he signed to do a movie. I happened to be at MGM, too. We had adjacent dressing rooms, and a sign stretched across the both of them. JACK-BENNY RUBIN, it said.

I was involved in the first—and the last—of just about everything he did. In Chicago in 1931 he was in Earl Carroll's "Vanies" and I was in "Girl Crazy." One day he came to me and said, "They want me to go with this radio thing and I'm scared."

Actually, what the station wanted was a one-shot, 15 minutes. Jack figured he could come up with 10 solid minutes of material. He planned to fill in with a song by Harry Stockwell (Dean's dad), who was appearing with Jack in the "Vanies." On the night of the broadcast there was a blinding snowstorm. Jack was eight minutes into the routine and no Stockwell. He was frantic. At the break I whispered to him to tell the listeners he would now do an imitation of Benny Rubin. He did and I stepped out and told the biggest joke I knew. Stockwell never did show up.

It filled the 15 minutes OK but it drew fire from the Chicago critics. "Jack Benny was very good until he tried that terrible imitation of Benny Rubin," Hazel Flynn wrote. "Then he was awful." Jack hated the whole experience and swore never to go on radio again.

That was pretty funny because the following year Ed Sullivan, the New York Daily News columnist, began his first radio show, "Broadway's Greatest Thrills," and conned everybody he could into going on for him. All our gang went, Burns and Allen, Block and Sully, Blossom [Seeley] and Benny Fields, Jack and Flo Haley—and Jack. Benny was soon signed for a radio show. He worked with a band and a stooge, Sid Silvers, then noted as the stooge in the box for Phil Baker. He had been on about two weeks when he made a horrifying discovery: In radio—unlike vaudeville—you run out of material. He came to me in a dither. We took some of my dialect jokes, switched them to English, and found we had enough for about two weeks. Jack was saved only by the arrival backstage one day of one Harry Conn selling jokes at $10 a shot—three for $25. Jack bought 50 of them.

As it turned out, however, Conn jokes worked best with a girl. So suddenly Silvers was out and Jack's wife, then known by her real name, Sadye Marks, was in. And that's how Mary Livingstone was born.

Oh, I loved the guy. So did Conn—in his way. It was Conn who sold Jack on the idea that you just couldn't tell jokes: You had to have a "situation"; that is, the audience knows that you are stingy or vain, and you bounce the humor off that. In short, the first situation comedy. Conn wrote the first stingy jokes and thereby rocketed Jack to the top along with Fire Chief Ed Wynn, Jack (Baron Munchausen) Pearl, Eddie Cantor, Rudy Vallee and Major Bowes.

In the end, though, Conn outsmarted himself. He began figuring that the $1500 a week he was getting wasn't enough. He told Jack, "Without me you are nothing. I want half." Jack held a council of war at the Lombardy Hotel in New York. There was Don Wilson, a sponsor's representative named Stauffer, an agency man named Harrington, Jack and myself. We each took a batch of scripts from aspiring writers and in the end we chose two young guys, Ed Beloin and Bill Morrow, later to become top men in their new field of comedy writing.

Conn? He became a performer, lasted a short time and ended up as a doorman in a theater. When things got really tough it was Jack (and he'd kill me if he knew I was writing this) who contributed to his support.

Generous with laughs

Not very many people really know Jack. Maybe I don't even know him. But I do know this. He is the only truly generous comedian I have ever known. I mean with laughs. I remember once we were three and a half minutes over on a show. Jack, who is his own best editor, said, "Take this out, take that out."

"But, Jack," complained the director. "That's seven minutes!"

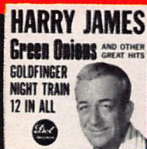

"OK, so give the extra three minutes to Benny Rubin. He kills 'em with that German doctor routine."

I know his bad points, too. Jack is sensitive; he can't stand criticism. It bugs him—except from his writers: He is disappointed if they don't criticize him. He has a terrible temper, particularly where incompetence is concerned. His worst vice is preoccupation; he can know you a hundred years and walk right by without noticing you. And yet there is great kindness. I wish I had a nickel for every time I'd seen an actor goof up lines, and Jack had turned to the audience and inquired, "Wouldn't you think after all these years I'd know what I'm doing?"

A tough man to say professional good-bys to. Really tough. But somehow or other, that night in the studio parking lot, I managed to get the car started and drive to my tiny house on a crowded street in West Hollywood. I was sleepless a long time.

is what became of Sallie

'Buckskin's mother is now a Beverly Hills matron

Sallie Brophy, with Buckskin's Tommy Nolan (top), and her own Susannah.

When NBC announced that an old TV show called Buckskin was being rerun as summer replacement for Branded, a friend, looking around the Beverly Hills home of Sallie Brophy, star of the 1958-59 series, said, "You're rather a far cry from the mother in Buckskin." To which Miss Brophy replied, "Oh, I don't know—I'm living the part now."

In the years since Buckskin went off the air, Miss Brophy has married and had two children; and, although a native of Phoenix, Ariz., she considers herself a New Yorker and Los Angeles "a frontier town" which she fled for Paris as soon as the program was canceled. Even in Buckskin, however, she was never the saccharine mother typical of television. She says, "They picked me because they knew I was basically mean." On the stage, where she had much of her early acting experience, she played everything from Sybil in Noel Coward's "Private Lives," in which she replaced Tallulah Bankhead, to the narrator and grown-up Wendy in Mary Martin's "Peter Pan." But in television it was different. "I was always cast as these mothers," she says. "I think that's why I finally went and did it."

After a few months in Paris, she decided definitely that she would get married. "I didn't have anybody in particular in mind," she says. "I didn't want to marry a Frenchman, but I was becoming very vulnerable, so I came back to New York." There she tried to give up acting for journalism. She worked for a time on Cleveland Amory's "Celebrity Register," but mostly her efforts ended up, she says, "with a lot of nice fellows taking me to lunch."

It was a writer she finally married—George J. W. Goodman, whom she calls Jerry. Upon meeting him, she announced, "I'm looking for a mate." She and Goodman were married on Oct. 6, 1961. What clinched it: She went to Hollywood to play—what else?—a mother in the motion picture "The Children's Hour." She says, "That did it! Jerry didn't have any place to go for a free meal."

When Goodman's novel "The Wheel-er Dealers" was bought by the movies, the couple moved to California—but not for good, says Sallie. The house in Beverly Hills is rented, and although Goodman has been kept busy with succeeding assignments, Sallie is projecting their future in New York. The children—Mark, now 2, and Susannah, not yet 1—will then spend some time each year at their grandfather's ranch in southern Arizona. Sallie says, "If we do end up in New York, I'll know there's someplace that's not all concrete."

In addition to the ranch in Arizona, the elder Brophy owned another in Mexico, has been an officer or director of half a dozen banks and as many prospering businesses, rates between 2 and 3 inches in "Who's Who," and is partly responsible for his daughter's acting career. Once, when he took her to Europe, he let her study at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. She had previously acted in little theater in Phoenix and had gone to the College of New Rochelle, N.Y., so that she would be near New York City for auditions. Her father's second influence on her career was perhaps a negative one. Acting enabled her to escape what she feels is his domination of the family. "I got away from the Old Man," she says, and then adds triumphantly, "I'm the only Democrat in the family!"

Unlike actresses who find family life a burden, she feels that marriage and maternity have improved her as a performer. She has had roles in a few television shows since her marriage—Ben Casey, The Fugitive and Slattery's People. "There was such a difference in working," she says. "I wasn't seeking applause or love. I just relaxed and enjoyed myself. I'm a better actress because I'm not so tense."

work was trying to find a sponsor for the Ben Casey series. The Selling Season was running out, and ABC was eager to sell the show and thus lock up its fall schedule.

They telephoned the office of an important potential sponsor. He was not in, but they finally located him at home. "We have a great new show for you," they told him. "Just the thing to move your product off those shelves. Come on over and see it."

The client demurred. "I'm about to leave on a two-week fishing trip with my 12-year-old son," he said. "I can't possibly make it today."

ABC's men were insistent. "It will take only an hour," they assured him. "This series is bound to be a winner. Bring your son with you, then you can go straight from here to your fishing trip."

The client relented. A short time later he and his son—both dressed for the trout streams—arrived at ABC's studios. They settled into their chairs as the lights went down, and the pilot film started.

In a scene halfway through the pilot, Ben Casey was called upon to administer a hypodermic needle directly to the back of a young girl patient. A close-up showed the needle actually entering the girl's flesh. At that instant, a low moan was heard in the screening room, followed by a thump. The client's son had fainted dead away.

The film was stopped, the lights came up, and a great deal of fanning, patting, and exhortation was required to revive the youngster. ABC's men were deeply apologetic.

The prospective buyer looked around at them, and said: "If this is what your series can do to a young boy, then I don't want any part of it." He gathered up his rather bleached-out son and went on to his fishing trip. Needless to add, he didn't buy Casey.

A week later, however, another sponsor did—the manufacturer of a product competitive with the fisherman's. Ben Casey, as is now history, went on to become an enormous television success.

The first potential buyer, who rejected Casey, told an ABC man later: "Every time I look at that kid and realize what he made me lose, I could rap him over the head with my fishing pole."

Many would-be television entrepreneurs are not above applying the techniques of the con game to the peddling of TV series. One such aspiring producer even managed to create a series out of thin air by carefully manipulating interest in a property that didn't exist.

The enterprising con man—let us call him Taylor—was employed as an underling at one of the major networks. He evolved an idea for a television series, then set about writing a lengthy treatment of it. When he had the presentation completed, he simply sat back and waited.

A few weeks later, the programming vice president of his network left for a two-week vacation. It was the signal for Taylor to put his plan into operation. He retrieved his presentation from his desk drawer, dated it, attached a memo, and had it delivered to the programming VP's desk bright and early on the first Monday morning of the executive's vacation. That meant it would be on ice for two weeks.

Taylor then began telephoning his many personal and professional friends in the newspaper and magazine business, tipping them off to this "hot new prospect"—the series he had outlined—which he claimed his network had under consideration for its forthcoming schedule. Items began to appear, describing the series and hinting at client interest. continued

Important actors were named as being enthusiastic about starring in the series. Leading TV writers, said the columnists, had been approached about contributing scripts.

All this comprised Step One in the con man's game. As the second step, Taylor then enlisted the aid of other friends in some of New York's leading advertising agencies. He had them telephone the programming VP's office and request copies of a printed prospectus on this series they'd been hearing so much about.

The network executive's secretary had to tell them that no such prospectus existed, but that her boss would surely be in touch with them when he returned from vacation. The VP returned to his desk at the end of two weeks to find Taylor's presentation, a raft of newspaper clippings on the proposed series, and what appeared to be impressive sponsor interest from a dozen advertising agencies.

Hurriedly he called in Taylor, registered the idea as being in development, and set about fabricating a prospectus. Taylor then was paid the usual holding fee of $1200 as the originator of the series idea and was made executive producer in charge of developing a pilot film.

It had all gone like clockwork. The con man eventually shot a pilot which was, in fact, good enough to attract sponsorship, and the series went on the air the following autumn.

More than one television series has been created out of thin air, some more legitimately than others. The TV Establishment contains a few dozen men with sufficient horsepower to do so in an aboveboard manner. A few years back, the Warner Brothers ABC series SurfSide 6 had just such a birth, and the manner of its conception illuminates some of the complex scheming which characterizes the Selling Season.

Dick Pinkham, a vice president of Ted Bates advertising agency, had in hand a number of Bates clients who were eager to sponsor a show. None wanted the great financial responsibility of a whole show, but each was willing to pick up part of the tab for a series. Pinkham had the idea he might lump them all together—one of the early ventures in "participating" sponsorship which now is a commonplace.

But Pinkham had no show for them. Thus it was necessary to create one—a commercially ironic application of Voltaire's axiom: "If God did not exist, it would be necessary to invent him." Pinkham telephoned William T. Orr, who heads Warner Brothers' TV department in California, and explained the problem.

He told Orr that ABC, which at that time was fighting for sales, would accept any reasonable vehicle in order to get business from his clients. So Pinkham and Orr stayed on the telephone Coast to Coast—for well over an hour—and composed a vehicle. The conversation went something like this:

"Give me a category in which practically every TV watcher is interested," Orr said.

"Glamor," Pinkham replied.

"Right," said Orr. "And young people."

"Glamorous young people," Pinkham contributed.

"And glamorous places," said Orr. "Acapulco, New York, Miami Beach."

"Adventure and intrigue," Pinkham said. "And sunshine."

Orr told Pinkham about a number of young players Warner's had under contract: Troy Donahue, Diane McBain, Lee Patterson, Van Williams. They settled on Miami Beach and an adventure-detective format. continued

They evolved a houseboat to take advantage of Miami's aquatic aspects. All the important details of what eventually became SurfSide 6 were decided by the end of the phone conversation. All that remained was for Orr to hand the framework to scriptwriters and have them commence the job of cranking out stories.

Pinkham, for his part, bought time on ABC and began describing to his eagerly awaiting clients this fascinating new series he had "found" for them. It enjoyed a two-year run.

An NBC programmer recalls when the network was busy selling one of its drama series of a few seasons ago. A young salesman was sent out—equipped with a film projector, movie screen, and a few cans of sample programs—to make a presentation before some executives of a leading photographic-equipment company.

He was back the next day, and his NBC boss approached him, saying: "Well, did you sell the series?"

The young sales rep looked down, a little sheepishly, and said, "No . . . but . . ."

"But what?" his superior said.

"But they sold me a whole new set of gear," he said, pointing to a shiny new projector and screen. "They said the equipment I was using was terrible!"

There was once a series called . . . well, never mind, let it rest in peace. The pilot film of this particular Western epic was so bad that even the producer knew it was rotten. "The lead actor mumbled so that scarcely a word could be understood," he told TV GUIDE, in a moment of retrospective candor. "The story was incredible. It made no sense at all. The scenery was palpably fake. The whole thing looked like a nickelodeon movie. The leading lady had one drooping eyelid. The horses were superannuated and sway-backed. It was B-A-D bad."

The pilot had been shown to scores of potential buyers and spurned at every turn. Finally, the producer decided on a bargain-basement technique to unload this horror: With every additional screening to a prospective buyer, he removed a thousand dollars from the asking price. The pilot rapidly was reaching the financial point of no return.

The weary producer arrived at the umpteenth screening, turned on the projector, and slumped down in a seat in the darkness, a dozen feet from two client representatives who had come to see his handiwork. The producer's embarrassment was acute, and he closed his eyes and tried to make the time go faster.

Then he heard the voices of the clients. One was saying:

"This is great stuff."

"Very exciting," said the other.

"I love it."

"Terrific story."

The producer perked his ears, scarcely able to believe what he was hearing. But the two clients continued to extol the film. They appeared even to understand what the leading actor was saying.

The producer sat up and began to keep score on his fingers. With every admiring remark from the pair of potential buyers, he restored another thousand dollars to the pilot's selling price. By the time the pilot was over, its price was as high as it had ever been.

The two clients stood up, smiled, asked how much, and said: "We'll buy it."

All of which proves that in television, just as in everything else, there's no accounting for taste.

REVIEW

by Cleveland Amory

The Virginian

When The Virginian started four seasons ago (when you and I were young, Maggie), it was announced as "the most ambitious and costly programming enterprise in network television history—one that will present TV features with motion-picture dimensions each week. This," the blurb went on, "will be achieved not only by the 90-minute length—which allows for full character development and expanded story-telling opportunity—but by color photography, location shooting, outstanding scripts and original musical scores."

When you say that, Pard, smile. Shooting a 90-minute show each week may "allow for full character development," all right, but it also must be allowed that the character gets to be so fully developed that he can survive physically only if he has a chance to rest every other week and appear in only about half the shows.

Luckily, this also can work as an advantage. If you haven't been sold on the Virginian (James Drury) through the years, you can always wait till next week and see an episode starring his side-kick Trampas (Doug McClure). And, if you're not sold on the Deputy Sheriff (Clu Gulager), and he's still a little Billy the Kid-dish for us, you can wait and get an episode starring the Judge (Lee J.

Cobb) or even the Judge's daughter (Roberta Shore) or his niece Dianne Roder. You can tell the good guys from the bad guys on this show, easily enough, but the cast may have some trouble because there are so many good guys and they are all so busy in different plots that they hardly get to know each other at all.

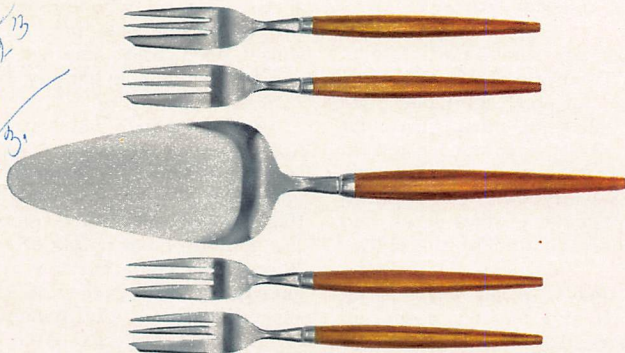

One episode recently even involved a girl losing her memory—which, on this show, is very dangerous indeed. Anyway, there was this girl, Clara Malone (Shirley Knight) and she falls over a cliff in a stagecoach with the Virginian. After she comes to, she asks, "Did I get on after you?" "No," he says. (He's very laconic.) In any case, it's soon apparent that the return of her memory is very important because she had a brother who was killed but before he was killed he told her where he had hidden his money. About this time a man turns up in town who claims to be her half brother. But an hour and a half later it turns out, of course, he is no brother at all, real or half, but a real no-good who did her brother in. At the end she rides off into the sunset on a train, and we feel she's going to remember happily ever after.

Another episode which involves bad timber guys versus good cattle guys starred Martin Milner as the cowboy who courts a logger's daughter. But this episode illustrated much better the genuine good points of this show. Wonderful scenic shots, a reasonably engrossing and believable plot and especially fine performances by not only Milner but also Arch Johnson, Joan Freeman and Russell Thorson. As for the Virginian, well, he had, as we remember, two lines in the whole show. But, at the end, when the timber guys agree not to cut all the timber, we did see him smile. It was great. But when you smile like that, Virginian, say something.
